Topping the Kirkby Stephen Classic store cattle show and sale at £2,000 was the overall champion, a 7 month old Limousin steer from the Marstons, Easegill Head.

The judge also awarded the overall reserve championship to a 10 month old Limousin cross heifer also from the Marstons, which went on to later sell for £1,350. They also took the red ribbon in the Un-haltered British Blue Heifer class, which sold for £1,520. The Marstons feed our Premium beef nuts and rolled barley.

Mould in feed and bedding can give rise to the bacterium listeria monocytogenes. This can result in both silage eye and listeria infection in cattle & sheep.

To avoid listeria, it is sensible to look at the silage making process. When looking at the silage analysis it is helpful to look at ash levels. If ash level is over 10%, then it is likely that there is soil contamination in the forage. This can have come about from picking up mole hills or from setting the mower too low. Also, low DM forages provide perfect conditions for mould so trying to make drier silage will help if the weather allows! Application of some silage additives will also reduce the risk from listeria.

Additive containing the bug Enterococcus Faecium will result in listeria monocytogenes not being present in the silage. Our silage additive – Pentoguard – contains this bug and so can help in the battle against listeria.

Please give us a call on 01765 689666 to discuss the benefits of using our silage additive.

Blackleg

Kathryn Henry

Spring turnout is a time to be aware of Clostridial disease in young cattle. These diseases include Blackleg, Tetanus, Black Disease etc.

Clostridial spores can enter the body of an animal through skin wounds, and contaminated needles/injection equipment. Muscle trauma from bulling in heifers and injuries at feed barriers can also trigger clostridial spore activation. Outbreaks of Blackleg, for example, have been reported after earthworks such as field drainage work and new road construction, and exposure of earth floors during mucking out buildings, causing exposure of the highly resistant clostridial spores in the soil.

With Blackleg, affected cattle are often found dead. More typically, they are very dull and depressed, do not feed and have a very high rectal temperature ($>41.0^{\circ}$). As the disease rapidly progresses, swellings of the legs, shoulders, back etc occur. The affected muscles become black and spongy and lose function.

Most clostridial diseases are entirely preventable by vaccination. The best protection is a two-dose course followed by annual revaccination.

For more advice on vaccinating cattle against clostridial disease, please call into the trade desk or ring 01765 689666.

Top tip

To avoid Red Gut in spare lambs wean abruptly. Use a lamb milk replacer with pre- & pro-biotics such as Vitalamb. Don't water the milk down, just cut them off. Also, wean when they get to 10kg in weight.

New TB rules

Dr Ruth Lawson

From 6 April 2016, farmers in the Low Risk Area of England will need to arrange post-movement tests for cattle bought from herds in annual (or more frequent) surveillance testing areas of England and Wales. Post-movement testing will not be required for cattle slaughtered within 120 days of arriving. Farmers will need to organise and pay for the post-movement testing of cattle brought in. Tests must be completed between 60 and 120 days after an animal has joined the herd.

For more information please visit the government website: - www.gov.uk/government/publications/bovine-tb-information-note-0116-post-movement-testing
